Railways and the Strikers.

As per announcement of Friday last the attempt has been made to stop the operation of the three great railway systems of the West by a strike of locomotive engineers and firemen at Winnipeg. The result of Friday's strike at that place was the movement of the strikers' callings held on Friday night it was decided to demand from the city council of Winnipeg the reinstatement of the striking and discharged policemen of the city under threat of tying up railway transportation to and through the city. The attempt has been reported as it has not been successful. It is being strongly opposed by the responsible heads of the trades unions concerned, and therefore may or indeed probably fail. But on the other hand the influences of anarchy may be strong enough to disrupt transportation. In any case a deliberate and determined attempt is being made, and success is possible, and the city will be called upon to consider just "where it are at." The belief that "All's well" because it happens for the time being, we do not have to be concerned. "This is one of the things that we know better than you do, we are not so young."

An ordinary strike on the part of not only lacked public sympathy, but was resented as an attempt to "put something over" on Edmonton by parties and for reasons. Amongst other things, the strike of unions, such as those of the printing trades, refused to recognize the authority of the Trades Union Council, and refused to go out. Many members of the skilled craft unions could not be so easily won over, and the cause looked unfavorably on the assertion of the principle that an agreement made by their union could be thus broken. For the men to establish the precedent of breaking agreements without cause was to give unscrupulous employers all the excuse they could ever desire for doing the same on convenient opportunity. Indeed, by the very nature of the skilled craftsmen the calling of a "sympathetic" strike in Edmonton looked much more like a blow to the city than a strike against the hated machine.

The skilled crafts had established the principle of unionism, and now if they acknowledge the authority of the Trades Union Council they were allowing the foundation principles for whose acceptance they had fought so long to be set aside at the call of a majority who were not skilled craftsmen in any sense and whose ideals and objectives were far removed from the original purpose of the strike. Unorganized skilled labor was altogether against it, and was chiefly favored by the less responsible and more recently organized elements of labor. For these reasons the strike did not represent the united support of labor in the city, and by the citizens at large.

The Deserter.

How, Thomas Crean has decided this is a good time to desert from under. It is, but it is one thing to side-step the consequences of the regime of tyrannical incompetency in which he has held office, and another thing to absolve himself from responsibility for his share in bringing about the present state of affairs. As between himself and his colleagues the others have at least the courage to stay still the night, or the sense to see that they might as well stay as jump overboard.

Mr. Crean's main excuse for quitting now is that the new budget is protectionist; and that, being so, it would be to his principles to which he has professed attachment. But the last budget was even more distinctly protectionist, and the Hon. Thomas supported it. And any deviation from principle that was involved in his support of the last budget, or could be involved in his support of the present budget, would be a mild misdemeanor as compared to his breach of faith in promising endorsement to the farmers on the eve of the election and then turning out to desert.

The resignation of Mr. Crean is timely, as it would be to be of no concern to anyone but himself. If even a "bourgeois" will fight when cornered, a Communist will fight when cornered, and measures were taken: the functions of city life began to be resumed. Amongst other things, the volunteer fire department was organized, motor services were established, and the streets were kept clear by volunteers. With the backing of the committee of 1,000 the city council began to emerge from under the barn. They summoned up courage to order full water supply, and to order plant material. They refused to allow the city to be taken over by the strikers. They took over the plant and operated at full pressure. From day to day the circumstances and the knowledge of leadership induced an expansion of activities under the banner of the citizens' committee, instead of the Soviet, National, or the Soviet resented such rebellion against its authority, and naturally there was friction. It soon became apparent that the police force, which had not gone on strike, held out under the orders of the Soviet rather than of the city. The city demanded a showdown. The police force struck. The city called in the National Guard. The city agreed to take orders only from the city. Then the attempt was made to force the city to accept Soviet control of the police by the threat to stop the railways if the striking and disloyal police were not reinstated.

The railways are to the nation what the circulation of the blood is to the human system. The nation cannot live if the railways stop running. The threat to stop the railways is a threat to cut the nation's throat—to replace civil government by anarchy. To stop the railways because the city council is a police force to continue under a police force that is not theirs from a body who did not engage and who do not pay it is to force the city to accept Soviet control of the police by the threat to stop the railways if the striking and disloyal police were not reinstated.
